...not alone" was the theme of the 1998 General Relief Society Meeting. Sister L. Dew's address at the meeting was "We are not alone." The Holy Ghost will enlarge our minds, our hearts, and our understanding. He will be there for us when it seems that no one else will be," she said. She said that one of the biggest challenges is not of getting the Lord to speak to us, but of hearing what he has to say. It is vital that we hear the voice of the Lord, she said. One of the greatest challenges for sisters in the Relief Society is the challenge of "busyness." This causes women to become so wrapped up in daily tasks that the eternal perspective is some how lost in the shuffle. "Our responsibility, therefore, is to learn to hear the voice of the Lord," Sister Dew said. "There is no group of women anywhere whom the Lord is relying on more than us." "Tonight may each of us resolve that nothing will stand between us and the Spirit of the Lord," Sister Dew said.

FINDING A PLACE TO LIVE

Students need to understand, read contracts before signing

By KRISTEN SONNE
kristen@du2.byu.edu
Daily Universe Editor

Your signature follows the endless fine print, legally binding you to abide by off-campus housing regulations and other rental agreements, but do you really know what you just signed?

Three BYU women recently learned the hard way that it is important to read their contracts.

For Kimber Watson and Sage Thibault, 20, juniors from Portland majoring in therapeutic recreation; Amy Lawson, 20, a sophomore in sociology from Toronto, Canada, their near homeless fall semester began last April when they signed the typical BYU off-campus housing contract before leaving Provo for the summer.

They expected to move in at the end of August, but when Thibault called for last-minute details concerning their keys, the owner of the house told her he had sold what would have been her first home in Provo.

A few days before, the owner of the house called Lawson and said he would be selling the house because the spring/summer tenants had damaged it and refused to pay their rent.

Lawson said the owner suggested that she and her four roommates find an alternate place to live.

"The new owner was maybe going to rent to us, but he was getting a loan and there was all this paperwork, so that it would not be ready for us to move in to," Lawson said. "Our landlord just sold the house because he did not want to fix it."

David Thomas, assistant general counsel for BYU and author of the off-campus housing contract, said generally a new property owner has to honor previous leases and contracts. He said he would have to look at the sales agreement to know exactly what it said, though.

Sometimes, a landlord can add his or her own addendum's that become part of the contract, Thomas said.

For example, the contract with Lawson, Watson and Thibault could have contained an item about selling the home, but the women did not thoroughly read the contract.

"The contract is what governs the relationship, if you fail to read it, then you are putting yourself at a disadvantage as to what you can and cannot do," Thomas said.

Lawson said that when she was signing the housing contract the landlord mentioned there was a possibility he could sell the house because of some condominiums going in behind the house. But that was the last she heard about construction.

In August, "he just said that he could break the contract, because that was in the contract," Lawson said. "He just totally broke his part of the contract."

John Pace, manager of off-campus housing, said, from what he understands, a landlord cannot break a contract.

"When a property is sold, the obligations of that property go with the sale. The new owner, in other words, will accept responsibility for the leases, the rental agreements, unless there is a clause in the rental agreement that says otherwise," Pace said.

If a BYU tenant and a landlord should get in a conflict, Thomas said there are programs set up as a mechanism to solve those differences.

The student and landlord would first go to mediation and then arbitration through the off-campus housing office.

"We really did not have the time to petition because we just wanted to find a place to live," Watson said.

The off-campus housing office, has three pamphlets that can assist tenants and landlords in disputes — "Resolving Conflicts Peacefully," "Mediation: An alternative dispute resolution process" and "Arbitration: An alternative dispute resolution process."

The pamphlets stress the importance of attempting to work things out before a third party becomes part of the picture.

Watson, Lawson and Thibault currently live in unapproved housing because they could not find another place to live a week before school began.

The off-campus housing granted them a waiver so they could live in a small, old house south of campus.

"Undergrads under 25 are required to live in BYU approved housing, unless they live with parents, or unless they have a special circumstance which we would grant a waiver for," Pace said.

Getting off-campus housing to approve the waivers was not an easy task for the three women.

"We had to write out individual letters of why we were not living in BYU-approved housing," Watson said.

But it all could have been avoided if they would have known their rights as constituted in the rental agreement, along with what the landlord agreed to.

WHAT IS A LEASE?

A lease is an agreement, either written or oral, between a landlord and a renter. The lease or rental agreement creates the legal relationship between the two parties. For the length of time the lease specifies, the renter has the duty to pay rent and live in a way not harmful to the premises or the neighbors. The lease terms are subject to state rental statutes and ordinances.

Written leases usually contain at least six parts:

1. The names of the parties involved (the renter and the landlord).
2. A description of the property (the address).
3. The time for which you have agreed to rent.
4. A statement about the terms of rental and deposit payments.
5. A set of rules and conditions.
6. The signatures of the parties.

Many standards required to be BYU approved

By JENNI JONES
NewsNet Staff Writer

When the year rolls to an end, students begin their pursuit for the next year's housing. The hunt begins as students search through the BYU-approved housing list in hopes of discovering some place to live in the upcoming year.

They are unlikely to know the process all of the apartments, houses or duplexes went through to become BYU approved.

The process of approving a rental facility begins with a landlord making an application to have his or her housing facility approved, said John Pace, manager of off-campus housing. Then, according to the off-campus housing handbook, a housing representative interviews the owner to determine if he or she is willing to abide by the standards required to be approved. The landlord must also take a test over the handbook, Pace said.

During the approval process, a housing representative will inspect the potential rental facility to see if the minimum approval requirements have been met. Pace said the landlord nearly always has to make corrections after the initial inspection before approval can be made.

Annual inspections of the rental facility are made after the initial approval although they are not as thorough, Pace said.

After they have met all the requirements for approval, landlords must sign a contract with BYU saying they meet all the terms of the agreement.

Out of the 19,780 rental spaces BYU has approved, only about 15,000 of them are occupied by BYU students, Pace said. The remaining spaces are occupied by students attending UVSC, LDS institute or four other small local colleges, he said.

"Even though there's a lot more rental spaces that are BYU approved than there are BYU students that live in them, the rental market is still tight because of the non-BYU students that can live in BYU housing," Pace said.

Because the market is so tight, students sometimes have difficulty finding housing.

"There's a need for more housing for college students," Pace said.

Families enjoy living in Wyview, Wymount

...and Erin Hansen, who moved into the new Wyview Park apartment complex in August, say they are enjoying the move and their neighbors. The Wyview apartments are in the older part of the city and the new Wyview apartments are air conditioned, prices are reasonable and they take care of their 11- and 12-year-old daughter, Rachel, Ammon said. He likes the good laundry prices and the fact that the dryer is included in the rent — and the fact that he can for Rachel, and nice neighbors around us," Erin said. Ammon said he and his wife have lived in the older, more established apartments in the area and the service they get is better. Ammon, who graduated in 1994, said she and her husband moved into Wymount almost three years ago and are pleased with the speedy service and the price and convenience of the married-student housing at Wymount and the fact that there is a waiting list. Lyle Durland, who graduated in August, said he and his wife lived at Wymount for six years.

Although they recently moved, Durland said it took 18 months to get in. The Hansens said they waited 14 months and were the last family to move into Wyview during the month of August.

While the completion of Wyview created 426 new on-campus apartments, it did not come close to meeting the demand.

Bart Stoddard, the manager of the Housing Business office, said prior to the public announcement of the new Wyview, there were approximately 900 applicants on the waiting list.

When the announcement was made public, the number of applicants totaled more than 1,800.

As printed on the application, families applying for on-campus housing can anticipate a 12- to 14-month wait, Stoddard said.

"(However), now that the complexes are full, we're not sure how long the wait will be," Stoddard said. "It depends on how fast people move out."

Garry Briggs, the manager of the family housing, said he believes there are more married students today because BYU enrollment has increased.

Big Mac doubles down, finishes with 70 homers

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Mark McGwire ended his season as mightily as he started it.

McGwire hit his 69th and 70th homers on the season's last day, a fitting finale for a record-smashing year he began with a grand slam on opening day.

Big Mac, who hit five homers on the final weekend, connected against Montreal rookie Mike Thurman in the third inning Sunday, then homered off Carl Pavano for No. 70 in the seventh. McGwire moved four ahead of Sammy Sosa and ended nine — nine! — in front of Roger Maris' old record.

Big Mac hit a 1-1 fastball 377 feet into the left-field seats at 1:10 p.m. for No. 69. After stomping on home plate, he took a few slow steps, then made several salutes to the crowd.

With two on and two outs in the seventh and the score 3-all, he connected off Pavano, lining a first-pitch fastball 370 feet over the left-field wall at 2:19 p.m., sending the Cardinals on to a 6-3 win over the Expos.

This time, even a curtain call from McGwire didn't quiet the 46,110 fans, who remained on their feet, cheering even as Brian Jordan took a called third strike for the third out of the inning.

McGwire, who has 10 multihomer games this year and 53 in his career, hit a go-ahead homer for the 24th time this season.

He opened the year with a slam on March 31 against the Dodgers' Ramon Martinez, then led the home run race all season except when Sosa twice passed him briefly — and then for only 103 minutes in all.

Sosa led for 58 minutes Aug. 19 before McGwire went back ahead with his 48th and 49th homers in the same game at Chicago. Sosa led for 45 minutes on Friday when he hit his 66th before McGwire answered.

Before connecting Friday, McGwire had been homerless in 14 at-bats.

McGwire also drew his NL record 162nd walk, tying Ted Williams (1947 and 1949) for the second-highest total in major-league history, on a pitch that nearly beamed him in the fifth.

McGwire has 180 homers the last three seasons. In 206 career games with the Cardinals, he has 94 homers, 189 RBIs and 205 walks. At Busch Stadium, he has 51 homers and 102 RBIs in 106 games.

The distances of his homers is 29,598 feet, nearly 400 feet higher than the peak of Mount Everest. It's also 5.6 miles of homers.

Frat member says sex was consensual

SALT LAKE CITY — An off-campus fraternity member has acknowledged having sex with an 18-year-old University of Utah student but says it was consensual.

The female student went to police after waking up Sept. 5 in a fraternity room wearing somebody else's clothes. She told authorities she had blacked out during a Kappa Sigma party. The rape investigation that resulted has hinged on the possibility that someone at the party slipped a "date rape" drug into her drink, which would have rendered her helpless to give consent.

Tests for date-rape drugs — which can cause memory loss — have not been completed, but detectives have recovered semen left on the woman.

Salt Lake City attorney Walter Bugden said his client, also a U of U student, denies drugging the woman or having knowledge of anyone else doing so. Bugden also said his client said the woman appeared clearheaded when the two had sex.

People close to the case have suggested there may be other suspects who had intercourse with the student after Bugden's client.

Finks may meet grandparents in West

SALT LAKE CITY — FBI officials believe a couple suspected of kidnapping their malnourished 20-month-old son from a hospital may be meeting the boy's grandparents somewhere in the West.

Craig Phillipe, spokesman for the FBI, said Saturday that investigators believe Cheryl and Richard Gardner may be traveling from the Pennsylvania area to meet Christopher Fink, and his wife, Kyndra.

Phillipe said the Gardners are believed to be driving a a brown Ford pick-up truck with Oregon license plates and a homemade camper shell held together by wood patches.

The FBI is attempting to locate them for help in finding David.

Western governors to have primaries

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah Gov. Mike Leavitt expects to set a date for a year 2000 multi-state primary at a meeting of western states' officials in November.

Utah, Nevada, Idaho, Wyoming and Colorado are committed to sending representatives to the meeting here and Arizona and Montana are likely to participate as well.

But the governor told the Deseret News editorial board that the primary will happen regardless of how many states ultimately join up.

"I see four to nine states in the first (western) primary, perhaps more joining" in 2004 and 2008 as the move to regional primaries builds across the nation, the governor said.

The most likely date for the first western primary is between March 6 and March 10, 2000.

And while Leavitt, a Republican, thinks the primary could be "open" in nature — that is, anyone could come to vote and not have to declare a party preference — Utah state GOP chairman Rob Bishop says in reality people will have to pick either a Republican or Democratic ballot.

Japan bankruptcy largest since WWII

TOKYO — A Japanese company with liabilities estimated at more than $18 billion said Monday that it has filed for bankruptcy, the largest such action in Japan since World War II.

Koji Suzuki, a spokesman for Japan Leasing Corp., said the company filed for court protection from creditors with the Tokyo District Court on Sunday night.

Suzuki refused to discuss other details, saying the company — one of three non-bank affiliates of the troubled Long-Term Credit Bank of Japan — was to hold a news conference later Monday.

Teikoku Databank Ltd., a Tokyo-based credit research firm, said Japan Leasing is estimated to have liabilities exceeding $18.2 billion.

That made the bankruptcy Japan's largest corporate failure in terms of debt since the end of the war, said Maiko Tanaka, a Teikoku spokeswoman.

Scripture of the Day

"And we talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies, that our children may know to what source they may look for a remissions of their sins."

In 2nd trial, Springville man deemed guilty

By STEPHEN SMITH
stephen@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

A Springville man was found guilty by an eight-member jury in the Utah Fourth District court, Friday night, of aggravated sexual abuse of a child.

Arvid Oakley, 54, of Springville, was previously tried on the same charges last May. However, because of a mistrial, the case came before the courts for a second time Thursday morning.

The verdict was delivered by the jury after two and half hours of deliberations.

The courtroom was filled with family and friends of the victim when the verdict was read, despite the late hour. Many members of the audience were crying after the verdict was read.

"He needed to be stopped and we did it," Lisa Hansen, the mother of the victim said after the trial.

After a day and a half of reviewing evidence and listening to the testimonies of witnesses, the jury received instructions from presiding Judge Anthony Schofield. Both the prosecution and defense then presented their closing arguments before the jury was allowed to deliberate.

One witness, Lt. Doug Whitney of the Utah County Sheriff's office, conducted an interview with Oakley when the allegations of abuse were initially investigated. Law enforcement officials obtained a search warrant and Oakley's home was searched.

Evidence that was obtained from Oakley's home included photographs of young girls in bathing suits, inappropriate drawings and several medical books.

During the interview with Oakley, Whitney said Oakley openly admitted that he had still had sexual "urges," towards little girls, that developed when he was a young man. Whitney also said that Oakley described himself as an "opportunist," who did not actively seek out chances to see little girls in little or no clothes, but took advantage of any opportunities that arose.

In closing arguments, the prosecution called Oakley an "opportunist." The prosecution added that many of the activities that Oakley engaged in were, on the face, innocent-looking, but as is typical of a "ruse," these actions were opportunities for Oakley to gratify his sexual urges.

Oakley's defense team argued that there was sufficient doubt in testimony and evidence, such as contradictions in the victim's video testimony and lack of medical evidence, to produce a not guilty verdict.

Ronald Guymon, 21, a BYU sophomore and an accounting major from Highland, was a member of the jury. In an interview following the trial, Guymon said of the jury that it was a good group of people to work with. He said the jury was careful to weigh all facts to ensure impartiality.

Follow lessons Christ taught, Sis. Smoot says

By ADAM BASCOM
bascom@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

To join the Saints to move West. The family ran into harsh elements which resulted in the death of their mother, one sibling and then their father. Despite the lack of parental guidance, home and money, the family was taken care of because of the goodness of the Saints.

She asked Relief Society sisters across the globe to consider what it means to "walk in the light of the Lord."

To help illustrate what it means she cited three lessons that Christ taught in his life.

The first lesson is walking in his light by being spiritually prepared. He teaches this with the parable of the ten virgins. Five were ready and five were not, and "...they that were ready went with him."

Smoot asked, "Sisters, are we ready? Are we individually and collectively in the process of preparing ourselves for the generous gifts that the Lord has promised to all who remain faithful? Are we prepared to receive his light?"

"So if we desire to walk in the light of the Lord, we put one spiritual foot in front of the other," Smoot said.

The second lesson is walking in his light by developing our talents. To assist in understanding this, the Lord uses the parable of the talents. "And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one."

"I fully believe that our talents are developed as we are called upon to serve," Smoot said.

Within the 4,200,000 women of the Relief Society program each and every woman makes a difference. Even one person using their talents can make such a world of difference in others lives, Sister Smoot said.

When the gifts are used to serve and help others the reward is great. By developing and using our talents we are serving others and walking in the light of the Lord, she said.

The third lesson is walking in his light by serving the individual. This message is conveyed in the parable of the sheep and goats.

To the sheep on his right hand he says, "...Come, ye 'blessed' of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Christ said, "Verily, I say unto you: Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Within the structure and nature of the Relief Society there is no reason to walk alone.

Sister Smoot emphasized that by reaching out to others we are also helping ourselves.

Sister Smoot concluded by saying, "His truths are plain and clear and His invitation is sure."

"When we wholeheartedly accept the Lord's invitation to walk in his light, we become spiritually prepared, we develop our talents, and we reach out to God's family," Smoot said.

Pres. Hinckley expresses gratitude for women came many hardships and trials after joining the church. She was a woman of faith and she walked in the light of the Lord.

"Now there are added challenges for you sisters of this day. Never before, at least not in our generation, have the forces of evil been so blatant, so brazen, so aggressive as they are today," President Hinckley said.

"Things we dared not speak about in earlier times are now constantly projected into our living rooms. All sensitivity is cast aside as reporters and pundits, speak with disgusting plainness of things that can only stir curiosity and lead to evil," he said.

One such example is that of abortion.

"What is happening to our appreciation of the sanctity of human life?" he asked.

"Abortion is an evil, stark and real and repugnant, which is sweeping over the earth. I plead with the women of this church to shun it, to stand above it, to stay away from those compromising situations which make it appear desirable," President Hinckley said.

President Hinckley assured the Relief Society women, "If anyone can change the dismal situation into which we are sliding, it is you. Rise up, O women of Zion, rise to the great challenge which faces you."

He also had some words for the men of the church.

"I pity the man who at one time looked into the eyes of a beautiful young woman and held her hand across the altar in the House of the Lord as they made sacred and everlasting promises one to another, but who, lacking in self-discipline, fails to cultivate his better nature, sinks to coarseness and evil, and destroys the relationship which the Lord provided for him," he said.

President Hinckley in his closing words again expressed his love and gratitude for the women of the church and the tremendous job they are doing in places across the world.

"But the task will never be finished. It will never be complete. May the light of the Lord shine upon you. May the Lord bless you in your great and sacred work," President Hinckley said.

In his address to the Relief Society women of the world, President Gordon B. Hinckley, expressed his love and appreciation for their faith and love.

"You provide inspiration. You provide balance. You constitute a vast reservoir of faith and good works. You are an anchor of devotion and loyalty and accomplishment," he said.

President Hinckley admonished Relief Society members to follow the counsel of President Joseph F. Smith when he asked women to, "Make Relief Society first, make it foremost, make it the highest, the best and the deepest of any organization in existence in the world."

As an example of exceptional attributes, President Hinckley related the life story of Mary Fielding Smith, wife of Hyrum Smith, sister-in-law of Joseph Smith, mother and grandmother of two presidents of the church. She was a convert who over-

In order to more fully appreciate the resources and tools available to help soothe the soul and heal a troubled world, Sister Jensen relayed some of the objectives of the Relief Society.

The first objective of the Relief Society is to help build faith in Jesus Christ and to teach one another the doctrines of the kingdom of God. This can be done through lessons, activities and shared experiences.

The building of spiritual strength is the most vital portion of the process for both the sisters and for the welfare of their families.

"Come to Relief Society," was the straight forward message relayed by sister Virginia U. Jensen in the General Relief Society Meeting Saturday evening.

Sister Jensen said that within Relief Society are programs specifically designed to help women find meaning and purpose in life for themselves and their families.

Sister Jensen pointed out that there are far too many marriages and families in crisis. There are women around the world who are struggling and they don't realize the full extent to which the Relief Society organizaone-bedroom apartment. Most apartments are unfurnished and families must pay for gas and electricity.

On-campus housing, however, proves to be less costly. Rent is $415 for a two-bedroom apartment at Wymount and $470 for a two-bedroom apartment at Wyview. Unlike off-campus housing, families at Wymount and Wyview pay only for electricity and an optional long distance service.

Lovelace said Wymount and Wyview have gas heat which is paid for by BYU. On an average, families in both housing units pay $20 a month for electricity. However, families at Wyview pay about $30 a month in the summer because of the air conditioning in the new apartments.

Stairs, balconies and other appropriate places must have guardrails and handrails.

The housing facility owner must not only meet the BYU inspection, but must also verify he or she has obtained a building permit and is in compliance with zoning law.

If a landlord wants to build a new housing facility, obtaining a building permit is a two-step process, said Dixon Holmes, Provo city zoning administrator.

First, the applicant must submit a basic outline or cite plan of the project, to be approved by the all the city departments like the water department and fire department.

After the city has approved the cite plan, the applicant is able to enter the second stage of applying for a building permit, Holmes said.

In this stage, detailed blueprints and building plans must be submitted for approval by the city departments. After all the city departments have given their approval, a building permit may be issued, Holmes said.

After the finished building has passed all final inspections, a certificate of occupancy is issued, Holmes said. This certifies the building complies with all zoning regulations for the building's intended use.

The zoning law at the time the building was built applies to that building forever, Holmes said. If a new law is more permissive than the old law, the landlord may choose to adhere to the new law, but he or she is never required to.

If a landlord is trying to obtain verification that his or her housing facility meets zoning regulations, and the building was built in the last twenty years, the zoning office can look in its records to see if the building was issued a certificate of occupancy.

This will let the zoning office know what the building was zoned as and prove the building meets zoning regulations, Holmes said.

The zoning office can then fill out a zone verification form which the landlord can take to BYU to prove his or her housing facility meets zoning regulations.

If the building was built earlier than the last twenty years, the zoning office may or may not have the certificate of occupancy on file, Holmes said. If not, research must be done to determine what the building was zoned as.

Holmes said the documents used in this research include county records, community directories to see what the facility has been used as before and past zoning ordinances.

If a landlord wishes to switch from housing families to housing single students, Holmes said the only necessary change is the amount of parking. A house occupied by six students is going to need more parking than if it was occupied by a family.

For one, two and three bedroom residences intended for singles, each bedroom must have two parking spaces per bedroom plus .25 spaces per unit for visitor parking, according to the Provo city zoning ordinance chapter 14.37.

The amount of parking may be negotiated with the city if the tenants need fewer parking spaces than provided by law.

Additionally, the south buildings of Wymount are currently being remodeled.

Although Wymount Terrace has 898 apartments, Wyview has more amenities including air conditioning and a larger square footage per apartment.

Although the apartments in both Wymount and Wyview are unfurnished, they come with a stove and refrigerator.

"Students can get furniture through a furnishing rental program," Lovelace said. "They can get it from the Wymount and Wyview offices, depending on where they live."

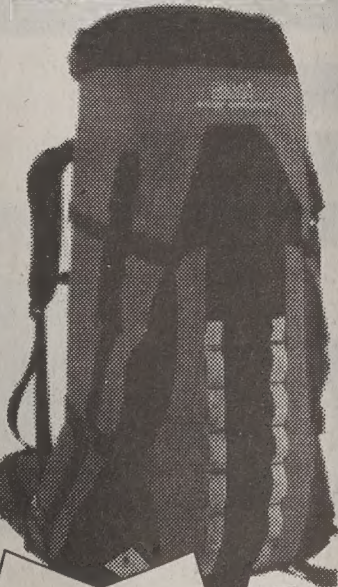

According to the off-campus family housing list of apartments for sale, the average off-campus rent ranges between $400 and $600 a month for a

Online law education provides opportunities

By CHRISTIE ROBINS

christie@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Computer technology is transforming traditional teaching methods.

On Sept. 15, Kaplan Educational Centers announced the launch of Concord University School of Law, the first major institution offering a juris doctorate degree earned completely online.

"We're not competing with the Harvards or the Yales. Our mission is to provide a high quality education for people who wouldn't otherwise be able to get one. That's the beauty of the Internet," said Andrea Wilson, spokeswoman for Concord University School of Law, a division of Kaplan Educational Centers.

Education on the Internet provides greater opportunities for working students, family caretakers and those living in rural areas who have trouble getting to a fixed facility, Wilson said.

Wilson said pursuing a legal education online provides maximum flexibility. There is no enrollment cap since the Internet is not restricted by the number of seats available, such as in a traditional classroom, she said.

Students can earn their degree at their own pace as long as they complete the requirements within six years, she said.

Online law students will view lectures on the Internet given by a board of professors via mainstream video. Students will submit assignments and receive feedback via e-mail. They can participate in chat rooms and will take exams on the Internet, Wilson said.

"There's a law library online where students can do research," Wilson said.

Applications are still being processed, so no students have been admitted to Concord University School of Law yet. Kaplan has received more than 2,000 inquiries since the announcement of the online law school on Sept. 15, she said.

John Faust, 23, a first year BYU law student from Vienna, Va., said he enjoys the conveniences of doing research online and submitting assignments via e-mail.

"I think online opportunities are great. Doing online research doesn't trap you or confine you to the law library. It allows you to spend more time at home with your family. If technology allows it, why not do it?" Faust said.

Yet, Faust said students still need to attend lectures in the traditional classroom setting to ask the professor questions and to have that "interactive experience."

BYU law professor Larry C. Farmer teaches in the traditional classroom setting, but uses the Internet to manage his law school seminar.

This system allows Farmer to focus less on mechanics and more on instruction, he said.

By making the change from paper and floppy disks to the Internet, "I can make myself more available to the students," Farmer said.

This change, which Farmer began about three years ago, was made possible by the law school's resources. Now, all students have access to the Internet, he said.

Beginning this fall, all students admitted to BYU's law school are required to have a notebook computer, said Peter Mueller, manager of information systems.

"Every seat in every classroom has a power supply. The students are taking notes during class on their lap top computers. There's access to online legal resources from the graduate carrels. Students can print from the carrels through the lab system," Mueller said.

Farmer's students can download assignments at their convenience and receive feedback via e-mail, Farmer said.

"Nobody seems frustrated. The students appreciate Internet based learning," Farmer said.

When asked how he felt about Concord University School of Law online, Farmer said he didn't know exactly what earning a degree online would entail, but said, "Students learn a lot just from their face to face associations with each other."

Mary Hanson, 19, a sophomore from Austin, Texas, majoring in elementary education, said she is aware of the impact computers are having on education.

"I'm trying to learn more. Teachers have to know more," Hanson said.

In a city in Texas, administrators are thinking about replacing all paper work with computers and giving every elementary school student a lap top computer, Hanson said.

Managing loan debt important for students

By LENNY GRAY

lenny@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

As tuition costs increase more students are seeking loans to help fund their education. Careful budgeting of post-graduation income may help students plan their debt rather than face penalties in the future.

Steve Olsen, federal program compliance officer on campus, said that helping students manage their debts will help them avoid future complications.

The Nellie Mae Foundation, located in Braintree, Mass., is one of the nation's largest providers for student loans. Last spring it completed a four-year study and found that student loan debt is higher than ever.

Lawrence O'Toole, president and chief executive of NMF said higher debt is becoming a problem for students.

"While student loans have helped millions of students gain access to a post-secondary education, higher debt, incurred from borrowing to cover the cost of college, is becoming more of a burden for students," he said.

"While most students are able to repay their loans successfully without significant impact on their lifestyle, that number is getting smaller over time."

Students who are not able to pay off their loans in the allotted time are defaulted. Defaulted students become ineligible for any other loan or consumer credit. The federal government also withholds wages and tax returns until the loan is paid in full.

The nation's average default rate is around 15 percent according to NMF. BYU's default rate is only 1.5 percent, but Olsen said his goal is to have a 0 percent default rate.

Last year, the federal government issued BYU its highest amount of student loan money. However, Olsen said the amount of money will more than likely decrease in the next few years.

"I expect that students will want to continue borrowing money, but in the next few years loans will start to level off because of a reduction in the number of borrowers," Olsen said.

The NMF reported that more than half of all college students are borrowing money to fund their education. Currently, over 50 percent of BYU undergraduates are also funding their education through student loans.

The average student loan for BYU undergraduates is approximately $7,000 below the national average. However, in each of the past five years the amount of loan money has increased $1,000. The NMF found that the average student loan debt in 1997 was $18,800.

Foreign study possible with scholarships from Fulbright

By PATRICIA CARRINGTON

patricia@du2.byu.edu

For students seeking to enhance their education by a foreign studies program, the Fulbright Scholarship may provide that opportunity.

The scholarship was founded by J. William Fulbright, a former chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Fulbright introduced the program to congress shortly after WWII, hoping to increase the mutual understanding between people in the United States and people of other nations.

Fulbright was a former Rhodes Scholar and believed that studying in England changed his views and perspectives on life forever.

The William Fulbright Scholarship provides a year of study overseas in almost every country of the world. There are different categories in which one might obtain a scholarship.

The program offers a one year foreign university experience for students who have received their bachelor's degree, and there is also a program offered to candidates seeking to continue their studies into the graduate levels.

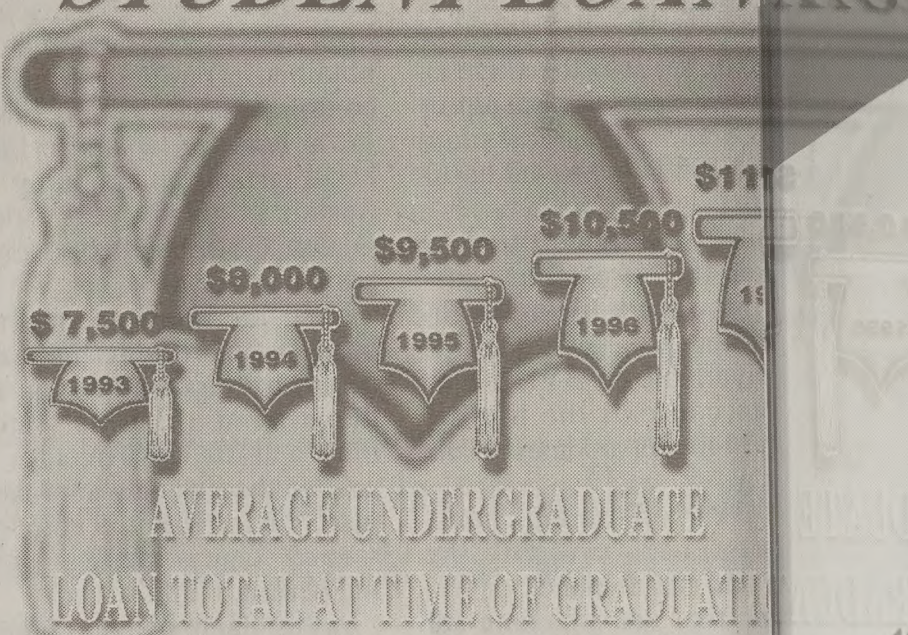

Another program that was recently created encourages future business leaders and there are also teaching programs available not only to students but to university professors as well.

BYU students have done fairly well among the competition in previous years, but Mark Peterson, the campus Fulbright Scholarship coach, thinks they could do much better.

"Last year we placed two students in Egypt and had alternates hoping for a last minute chance to study in Jordan and Japan, but those chances did not materialize. The year before we placed one student in Romania and one in Germany," Peterson said.

Accounting programs rank high

By PHILLIP STAHL
phillip@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

BYU climbed to the second place position on the graduate programs list in the 17th Annual Survey of Accounting Professors. Among undergraduate programs, BYU held its third place seat from the 1997 survey.

That means jobs for BYU Students and that's the bottom line, said Lee Radebaugh, director of the School of Accountancy and Information Systems.

"The top five of Public Accounting Report's categories unquestionably are all excellent schools with mature programs and terrific faculty," said Bernie Milano, partner-in-charge of recruiting at KPMG Peat Marwick.

The poll, published in the Aug. 15 issue of Public Accounting Report, is an annual evaluation of each school by the Administrators of Accounting Programs, a national organization of accounting department heads.

These administrators rank schools based on program curriculum, quality of faculty and students and graduate placement rates.

"As a result of this rating and the reputation our students have in the firms, we are recognized as a national recruiting school. All of our graduates are placed and usually have several job offers," Radebaugh said.

The rankings have a positive effect on the other School of Management programs, and the department excels because change is welcomed inside the program, said Owen Cherrington, information systems coordinator.

Department representatives said foreign missionary experience was an asset to the accounting majors.

"One thing that gives our accounting graduates a professional edge in the international market environment is the fact that close to 65 percent are bilingual," Radebaugh said.

"Recruiters want the values that are encompassed within the BYU culture — our integrity and our work ethic," said Douglas Prawitt, professor with the School of Accountancy and Information Systems.

Steve Albrecht, associate dean of the Marriott school of Management, compared the program to a snowball.

"Our program is like a snowball rolling downhill, picking up momentum as it rolls along," he said.

The Longhorns of the University of Texas moved up from their second place undergraduate ranking to first place with a 50 point spread. Their graduate program continued on top with a 79 point spread from second-place BYU.

Sister Madsen will address the following: As the scope of historical research has broadened to include the lives of men and women once peripheral to traditional history, their own life writings have become valuable resources. No one has a richer collection of such documents than the Latter-day Saints. Knowledge of our collective past from these records provides a frame of reference that enlarges our understanding of the present while it enriches our sense of identity.

Dr. Madsen is a professor of history, a research professor with the Joseph Fielding Smith Institute for Church History, and a former associate director of the Women's Research Institute. She received her BA in English literature and her MA and PhD in American history from the University of Utah and is currently teaching American women's history, although her primary research is in LDS women's history, including a biography about Emmeline B. Among her scholarly studies on LDS women are seven award-winning articles and the books Sisters and Little Saints, a centennial history of the Primary Association (coauthored); In Their Own Words: Women and the Story of Nauvoo; Battle for the Ballot, essays on the winning of woman suffrage in Utah; and Journey to Zion: Voices from the Mormon Trail, written at the invitation of the Church's sesquicentennial committee.

Professor Madsen has also participated in three PBS productions, Utah: The Struggle for Statehood; Let the Women Vote; and Trail of Hope. Past president of the Mormon History Association and Utah Women's History Association, she was appointed by Governor Leavitt to the Board of Utah State History, of which she is vice chair.

Springer showcases stupidity

I realize I am going against conventional wisdom in saying this, but I think "The Jerry Springer Show" is good for America.

In case you are not up on your "pop culture," either because you do not watch television or because you are from Canada, I will explain who Jerry Springer is. He hosts a syndicated talk show, the purpose of which is to give regular, every-day people an opportunity to beat each other up. Where 10 years ago two guys involved in a dispute might say, "Let's take this outside and settle it like men," they now say, "Let's take this to 'The Jerry Springer Show' and settle it like a couple of wet-diapered babies."

SNIDE REMARKS

By ERIC D. SNIDER

NewsNet Columnist

Generally speaking, the show features a person who has some terrible secret to tell his or her love interest. The terrible secret is usually on the order of "I'm a nightclub stripper," or "I'm not actually a woman, but rather, an armadillo," or "I'm a Unitarian." They will tell the audience the secret first, and then their partner will come out and be the last person in the whole country to know, which, you can imagine, must soften the blow quite a bit. If there is a third party involved — the owner of the nightclub, or the head of the Unitarian church, for example — that person and the person who has been surprised on national television will usually wind up fist-fighting while the audience hoots and hollers and — dressing like trash as if they had no idea they'd be on TV when they got up that morning, swearing at each other, throwing punches, saying, "Talk to my hand," etc. — all of that makes the stupidity almost palpable, to where it almost becomes an entity, and you have to capitalize it (e.g., "The Stupidity oozed out all over the stage, and the janitors had to mop it up after the show was over").

And as for the husbands, wives, boyfriends and girlfriends whose partners invite them to come on the show so they can reveal some big secret to them — what's up with these people? If you are ever involved in a relationship in which the other person wants to discuss a matter of major import on national television, rather than just telling you what it is — RUN, do not walk, away from that relationship, for you can know immediately that whatever it is they have to tell you, it can't possibly spell anything good for you.

(Actually, men, maybe it's our aversion to discussing relationships that has driven the women to this: Knowing that if they say, "Let's talk about 'us,'" we will flee the scene, they are left with no alternative but to drag us on TV and thereby FORCE us to talk. It's something to think about, at least for maybe one second or so.)

Anyway, back to the stupidity issue. This is why "Jerry Springer" is good for America: It helps us identify the stupid people in our society. Now, being stupid, in and of itself, is not particularly heinous, because most stupid people are also nice, which sort of makes up for it. But "Jerry Springer" people tend to be stupid AND belligerent, which is a bad combination. Because if someone is dumb, that already limits their potential to contribute to society. But if they're obnoxious, argumentative and militant on top of that, well, that pretty much eliminates all hope of them doing anything productive other than working at traveling carnivals, or Denny's.

And so by letting these people appear on TV, it helps us identify them. Many of them, if you were to see them on the street, would not immediately appear stupid. You might make the mistake of asking them for directions, or entrusting them with a secret treasure map, or something like that. But if you recognize them from their "Jerry Springer" appearances, then you know instantly — "Stay away from this person! He or she can do me no good, and I might even have to talk to his or her hand!" "The Jerry Springer Show" is sort of like "America's Most Wanted," alerting us to the people whom we should be on the look-out for.

Eventually, every stupid person in America will have either appeared on "The Jerry Springer Show," or will have a talk show of his or her own. Then the rest of us can sleep easy at night, knowing that the stupid ones among us have been clearly marked and can't cause us any trouble. I'm sleeping better already, even as I write this.

Garrens' premiere show enlists audience's help

By ANN ROBINSON

ann@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The Garrens Comedy Troupe presented yet another entertaining performance Friday night.

The cliché "the audience makes the show" was definitely applicable at the Garrens' season premiere.

As with all Garrens' performances, the audience was frequently called upon to suggest titles, props and feelings which the Garrens then integrated into their performance.

This forced participation allows the audience to help determine the content and therefore success of each Garrens show.

This factor creates a unique, and often hilarious improv., because no one, including the performers, know what's going to happen next.

The Garrens' show began with a dramatic laser light show "shipped directly from Japan" (or at least that's what the audience was told).

Although the "laser lights" were actually small flashlights, the unusual props and choreographed movements created a memorable performance.

A collection of sketches and improvisations, both new and old, delighted the enthusiastic audience.

"Journal," a mockery of the stereotypical differences between men's and women's perceptions and memories, was humorously performed by Lauren Keller and Eric Snider.

Although this particular sketch is available on the Garrens' CD, and has long been part of their repertoire, it was a well-received by the audience.

The Garrens cast showcased their quick thinking, ease on stage and clean, tasteful humor throughout the show.

In one of the more popular improvisations, "Story, Story, Die," four cast members created and told a continuous story.

This situation puts pressure on the performers because if they mess up in any way the consequence is "death."

Of course the death is acted out in a creative way suggested by the audience; Friday night the cast died by squirrel, hair gel, and a flossing wedgie.

The highlight of the show was their closing number—"The Titanic Song."

Snider, a former member of the Garrens, wrote and performed a parody of Celine Dion's hit song, "My Heart Will Go On," while the rest of the Garrens cast performed a comedic portrayal of the popular "Titanic" movie.

Every Friday night the Garrens have two shows on BYU's campus.

Tickets are $4 for the 7:30 p.m. show and $5 for the 9:15 show.

For more information, call the Garrens hotline at 379-8888 or visit their web page at www.garrens.com.

Cougar offense needs fine tuning

By CHRIS WILSON
chris@du2.byu.edu
Assoc. Sports Editor

The Cougar offense almost got its growl back Saturday.

The sputtering Cougar offense, which had thrown only two touchdowns in three games this season, teetered on the brink of steamrolling the Division I-AA Murray State Racers but never got its heavy equipment completely into gear.

The first half quickly degenerated into a punting clinic. BYU's stalled offense was completing passes but going nowhere. Neither was Cougar running back Ronney Jenkins, who was corralled for most of the game by a strong Racer defensive front.

"It's tough to run when they've got eight men stacked in there," head coach LaVell Edwards said. "It makes no difference whether they're I-A, II-A or what they are; they had a very good defense and you have to give them credit."

Jenkins, the Cougars' offensive sparkplug against Arizona State, was shut down for the second week in a row. Despite his two touchdown runs in the first half, Jenkins finished the game with 46 yards on 11 carries. Jenkins got a little help from running backs Junior Mahe and Aaron Cupp, but the offense allowed four sacks the Cougars only netted 59 rushing yards for the game.

"Personally, I'm not worried about the run," Jenkins said. "I'm just glad that we caught the ball and got positive yards."

A week ago against Washington, dropped balls frustrated the pass-oriented Cougar offense. Against the Racers, BYU's receivers were magnetic hauling in all of the reasonably thrown passes and coming finger tips away from a few others. In fact, receiver Margin Hooks, who only had six receptions coming into the Murray State game, caught five passes for 179 yards and a touchdown. Add in the three bombs that were mere inches from becoming touchdowns and Hooks has an incredible game.

During the second half, the offense was finger tips away from breaking the game wide open. Back-up quarterback Drew Miller got the wheels rolling early in the second quarter when he replaced starter Kevin Feterik. But the offense looked more like a 15-year-old learning to drive a stick shift — at times appearing poised and confident while completely stalling at others — than the well-oiled passing machine BYU has been in the past.

Overall, Feterik and Miller combined for 313 passing yards, two touchdowns and two interceptions. The Cougars had gone 10 games without breaking the 300-yard passing barrier. Saturday was the Cougars' opportunity to pad the stats, especially with the Racers crowding the line. But Feterik and Miller working together barely broke the 300-yard mark.

BYU freshman Junior Mahe celebrates his second touchdown Saturday at Cougar Stadium as Aaron Cupp, left, gazes on.

"They have different styles and each guy kind of complements each other. We're glad to have both of them," he said.

Both quarterbacks had one thing in common. Their favorite receiver was sophomore Margin Hooks. Feterik connected with Hooks on an 80-yard touchdown bomb in the third quarter, extending BYU's lead to 29-0.

Miller then found Hooks for a 70-yard pass early in the fourth quarter that set up a 29-yard touchdown reception for freshman running back Junior Mahe. Mahe's score gave the Cougars a 36-6 advantage.

"(Kevin) and Drew are great quarterbacks," Hooks said. "You don't want either one of them to feel down on themselves, because you never know who might get injured or what, but we need both of them."

Hooks finished with five receptions for 179 yards and the one touchdown catch. It was the most yards gained by a Cougar receiver since Ben Cahoon went for 219 yards against Arizona State last season. Hooks said he was satisfied with his performance but thinks he still can improve.

"Overall, I don't think it was the best. I made a lot of mistakes, but from those mistakes I learn," he said.

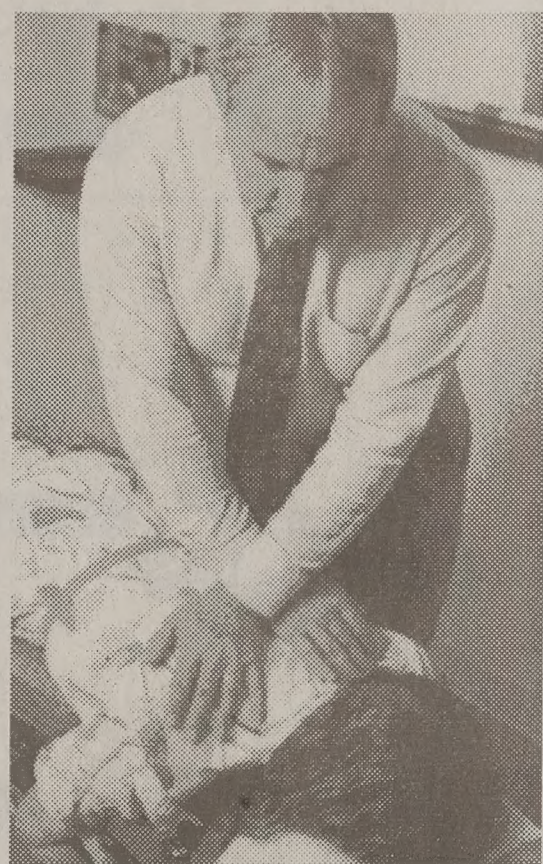

Enter quarterback number three. With six minutes left in the game, Doman assumed the quarterbacking duties. He handed the ball off several times to Cougar running backs, eventually leading BYU to its final score.

Doman also entered the game earlier as a receiver and caught a 7-yard pass from Miller. Doman said the idea came from the coaches, but he willingly accepted it.

"I think it is what the coaches want me to do," Doman said. "I've always told them, 'Hey I want to play. I'll do whatever I can to get on the field.'"

This was BYU's first game against a Division I-AA opponent since 1979, when the Cougars defeated Weber State 48-3.

Two BYU women's cross country runners trained last week before the Cougars left for the Mountain West Invitational in Montana. BYU hurdled the competition there and took first place Saturday.

Women's x-country wins Montana meet

By AARON SHILL
aaron@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

BYU women's cross country coach Patrick Shane said Saturday's race in Montana would be a good indicator of his team's early season progress. But after watching the Cougars run to victory in the Mountain West Invitational, Shane will probably need a longer measuring stick than he expected.

BYU outran Arizona 30-70, paced by Laura Heiner's third place finish with a time of 21:04. Arizona's Amy Skiersz, who placed first in the three previous years, made it four straight finishes in the top spot.

Heiner, a true freshman competing in her first collegiate race, posted the fastest time ever for a BYU runner in the invitational, held annually at Missoula, Mont.

"Just a phenomenal performance by a great freshman," Shane said. "She showed why we were so happy to get her."

Heiner, who was the nation's No. 1 high school recruit last year, credited her teammates with helping her concentrate on the race. She also said that the strength of the athletes surrounding her was a factor in her successful debut.

"It definitely has a lot to do with the competition," she said. "It just pulls you along."

In addition to Heiner, the Cougars, who ran with two teams, made a strong showing all across the board. While the Cougar A-team placed first, the B-team came in third after Arizona with 112 points.

All-Americans Maggie Chan and Elizabeth Jackson crossed the line fourth and fifth respectively. Shane, who was evaluating many of his athletes in competition for the first time this season, was not short on compliments for the Cougars. He said that the team ran with confidence, strength and proficiency.

"If this is any indication of what kind of team strength we have, it's phenomenal," he said. "This is by far the best team I have ever coached."

Shane pointed to the times registered by his team as an indication of its ability. In addition to Heiner's impressive finish, Jackson ran the course almost a minute faster than she had the previous year with a time of 21:13. Her time also bested last year's 21:17 posted by BYU's Courtney Meldrum, a three time All-

American.

Shane also said that the difficulty of the course was a measure of the Cougars' strength. The invitational was run on a 6000-kilometer course with eight logs acting as barriers and a hill that Shane called "killer."

"I'm pleased that they showed their strength in being able to hold up on that type of course," he said.

Saturday's meet made it clear that there is no shortage of talent when it comes to the runners wearing blue and white. Heiner said that the team's performance is an indication of its depth.

"There's few people out there who are going to be able to compete against us," she said.

With two races completed, the Cougars are in good shape. Shane, who points to the team's training, nutrition and sleep patterns as the reasons for its success, said the team is further along than he previously thought.

"They ran so well that I don't think we should do anything different than what we are doing," he said.

BYU will not have a chance to be content, however. Next Saturday the team will compete in the Stanford Invitational, featuring two other top-five teams in Stanford and Georgetown.

"It will be the most competitive race we've run so far," Shane said.

Early deficit no problem for men's soccer team

By BRUCE JACOBS
bruce@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

The BYU men's soccer did something Friday that the government has been trying to do for years: it overcame a deficit.

After trailing the Colorado State Rams 1-0 at halftime, the Cougars fought back to a 4-2 victory on three second-half goals by freshman forward Brandon LeRoy.

While being in the hole may be nothing new to Congress, the Cougars aren't used to it.

Using a fast transition game, Colorado State stole the ball in the 31st minute and quickly spread the field on a breakaway. When BYU's defense converged in the middle, it left the Rams' Bobby Hayes all alone on the right side. Hayes took a pass from the middle and fired past goalkeeper John Morris to put the Rams up 1-0.

The Cougars had several opportunities to tie the game in the waning minutes of the first half but came up empty-handed.

Enter LeRoy.

The burly freshman dominated the second half with his physical style of play and powered three balls past Rams goalie Darin Menapace to put new fire into the Cougar team.

"It was just a team effort," LeRoy said. "It shows a lot of character for us to step up and keep going after playing a first half that was really poor."

BYU's comeback began at 39:18 in the second half, when freshman forward Matt Affleck slid the ball through the Rams' defense to a wide-open LeRoy, who blasted the ball past Menapace to tie the game.

Less than two minutes later, defender Chad Oyler's throw-in found fellow defender Nate Morris in the middle. This time it was Morris' turn to thread the Rams' defense to the waiting LeRoy, who made it 2-1 for the Cougars.

The freshman forward then decided to play wide-receiver.

With 27:02 left to go, senior defender Dave Bryan got the ball deep in Cougar territory and launched a long downfield pass to a sprinting LeRoy. Controlling the pass on the run, LeRoy wound up and unleashed his third strike of the night to put the Cougars up 3-1.

At 10:13, sophomore forward Nate Lowe hit freshman defender Justin Marostica down the right side. Marostica's cross-shot was deflected off a diving block by Menapace, but freshman forward Elliott Bailey was there to knock it in for the Cougars.

The Rams managed a final score when Kevin Hare headed the ball in off a free kick with seconds remaining, but by then it was like the bee stinging the fly swatter.

Rams coach Ziggy Wiegman credited his team for its first-half play and BYU for their comeback.

"They deserved to win," Wiegman said.

Watkins said Colorado State is a team that believes in itself but credited the Cougars for their come-from-behind win.

"It's good to see that we can fight through a disappointing first half," Watkins said.

The Cougars next play host to the Colorado Buffaloes Friday at 9 p.m.

Cougars turn up the heat in New Mexico golf tourney

By GREG GIAUQUE
greg@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

The BYU women's golf team saved the best for last as senior Jaime Stevenson and freshman Carrie Summerhays led the Cougars to an 11th place finish at the Dick McGuire Invitational in Albuquerque, N.M., Saturday.

Summerhays shot a par 73 and Stevenson shot a 75 on the last round allowing BYU (940) to jump five strokes ahead of preseason No. 12 Texas A&M (945). The team rebounded from a second round 324 to post a third round 301 that was the third best score of the day among the 17-team field.

Preseason No. 5 University of Southern California (914) won the tournament, just one stroke ahead of Texas Christian University (915). Tulsa (919), Oklahoma State (925) and Texas (926) rounded out the top five.

Head coach Gary Howard said the improved play sparked an excitement in the team that he hopes will carry into future play. He also said the inexperience of the team came through at times.

"The kids came back in the third round and played some marvelous golf," Howard said. "We still have quite a bit to learn. The second round was part of that learning process."

Stevenson had a shaky first round 78 but came back to play well, shooting a 73 and a 75 in the final rounds to card a 226 total and place 7th in the tournament. She finished 12 shots behind tournament winner Angela Stanford from USC.

Stevenson said her first round was a little disappointing, but also a motivation to play better.

"I knew I could play better," Stevenson said. "I was excited to play again, and then I got off to a good start (on Friday), which is important for me. I made a couple of bad decisions ... and didn't finish well, but I'm pretty satisfied with my play."

Howard said he was pleased with Stevenson's steady play.

"Jaime (Stevenson) is really ready to take a step up in her game," Howard said. "We're excited of the way she is playing. I think we'll see some strong play from her."

The women's team takes a break until Oct. 12 and plays next at the Oregon State Invitational in Corvallis, Ore.

Women's soccer slips up

By ELIZABETH PALMER
elizabeth@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Something happened Saturday night that hasn't happened in two years, 11 months, and 27 days. The BYU women's soccer team lost at home. The University of Montana was the culprit, breaking the Cougars 27-game home winning streak.

The Grizzlies came away with a 4-1 win over the Cougars at South Field in Provo.

"They came out ready to play and we didn't," BYU head coach Jennifer Rockwood said. "This is a very disappointing loss, probably the worst loss in school history."

The victory for Montana was the 100th victory for Grizzlies head coach Betsy Duerksen.

"We came out fired up," Duerksen said.

Montana started the scoring early when freshman midfielder Colleen Joyce hit the ball high into the right corner of the net off an assist from senior forward Sara Overgaag.

The Grizzlies upped the score to 2-0 later in the first half when sophomore midfielder Jodi Campbell scored with a high shot over the goalie.

BYU came out strong in the second half but could only manage one goal, although it outshot the Grizzlies 21 to eight.

"I thought we played well in the second half ... (but) for some reason we (couldn't) find the net," Rockwood said.

Duerksen said BYU was likely tired from its long week of soccer.

"That was their third game of the week, and they've been on the road," she said.

Montana increased its lead to 4-0 in the second half with another goal by Joyce and one by Karen Hardy. BYU finally responded with three minutes left in the game when senior forward Shauna Rohbock put the ball in off an assist by sophomore midfielder Natalyn Orchard Lewis.

"The defense didn't play very well," Rockwood said.

The 27th and final victory in the winning streak came Friday night when BYU handed Butler University a 7-0 loss, also at South Field.

"Everyone played very well," Rockwood said. "We did all the things we wanted to do."

It was a team effort for the Cougars as they had six players score goals.

"We had a lot of different people score (Friday night)," Rockwood said. "That sets a tone for the team."

The game was still scoreless with ten minutes remaining in the first half, but Athelia Graham broke the stalemate with a shot off a corner kick by Kim Lowe. Lowe's shot deflected off the Butler defenders to Rohbock, who found Graham for the assist.

Brittany Harlan followed with her first goal, a shot she volleyed in off a pass from Graham.

The Cougars led the game by only two at the half, but they exploded for five goals after the break.

"I think it was the difference in our mentality (in the second half)," Lewis said, who scored two goals in the game. "We came out and did what we needed to do."

Rockwood said that once the scoring began, her team got pumped.

"I knew it would take a few goals for things to break down for Butler," she said.

Lewis scored two quick goals to start the second half, assisted by freshman midfielder Sarah Higham and Rohbock.

"I was fed perfectly," Lewis said. "It was a lucky night. I attribute it to well taped ankles. I told the trainer taping me up I needed to score ... and I guess it worked."

BYU scored three more goals before it was over, with Sarah Reading, Rohbock and Amber Anderson all finding the net.

"As a team I thought we played very well ... we were shaky at first but we got it down and took off in the second half," Higham said.

Cross country finishes fourth

Montana's big sky wasn't exactly friendly to the BYU men's cross country team.

The team was slowed by two planes that broke down while traveling to the Mountain West Invitational at Missoula, Mont. Despite arriving at 1 a.m. Saturday morning and competing just nine hours later, the Cougar's still had enough kick in their legs for a fourth-place finish.

"It could have adversely affected us, but the guys got it out of their minds and went to work," head coach Sherald James said.

The Cougars finished with 107 points. Arizona (59), Michigan (85) and Montana (100) ended up ahead of BYU in the final standings. Junior Matt Poulsen finished first for BYU and sixth overall with a time of 24:53.

Women spikers hog tie Cowgirls

By CAMIE HOWARD
camie@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

The BYU women's volleyball team rounded up the Wyoming Cowgirls in a sweeping victory Saturday night. The fifth-ranked Cougars won the match in three games, 15-4, 15-7, 15-6.

The first game of the match belonged entirely to BYU. The Cowgirls had many holes in the middle and served up many wide shots. Even though the scoreboard showed four points total, Wyoming had to work hard for each one.

By the middle of the first game, the Cowgirls were wiping their brows and shaking their heads. BYU's defense was too much for Wyoming, made obvious by the widening point spread.

After jumping out to a 5-0 lead in the second game, Wyoming seemed to think BYU would be shaking in its shoes. The Cougars, however, had a different game plan in mind as they rallied back to take a 10-5 lead.

At the beginning of the third game, a continuous stream of side outs kept the score low and evenly matched. Wyoming seemed to be more prepared for BYU's blocking efforts as it stepped up its offense. However, after the score reached 5-4, the Cowgirls ran out of gas and only scored two more points by the end of the game.

BYU outside hitter Helen Hjorth racked up 18 kills for the match followed by another outside hitter, Mari Carpenter, who had 13 kills.

Hjorth attributed her successful game to practicing hard during the previous week.

"The assistant coaches were scouting and knew what would work," Hjorth said. "I worked on an angle shot all week."

Hjorth also said the middle blockers did well, enabling her to set up good shots.

Coach Elaine Michaelis agreed with Hjorth, adding that setter Anna-Lena Smith, with a match total of 45 assists, also contributed by playing exceptionally well.

Another factor that played a part in Hjorth's successful performance was Wyoming itself, according to Michaelis.

"Helen shined tonight because of what the other team gave us," Michaelis said. "They played in a way that opened up shots for Helen."

Wyoming is actually a better team than it showed, according to Michaelis.

BYU golfers shoot for win in Washington

By GREG GIAUQUE
greg@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

The BYU men's golf team looks to take a little revenge for the football team today as it begins play at the Huskie Invitational in Seattle, Wash.

Washington hosts this first-year tournament that will feature such top golf programs as California, Stanford, Tulsa, Northwestern and Washington State.

In spite of the tough competition, head coach Bruce Brockbank said the six-man, count-four format gives BYU a great opportunity to win.

"It will be a fun tournament," Brockbank said. "On paper we're the best team, but that's why we play the tournament. We have a very healthy squad; we have a chance to win."

Miller brothers Andy, Scott and Todd spearhead a squad that Brockbank said is heavy with talent. Billy Harvey, Jose Garrido and Jesse Hibler complete the team.

Garrido, a junior from Cali, Colombia, said he was looking forward to a fun tournament.

"It's pretty exciting. We have one of the best teams in the nation," Garrido said. "I heard it's a pretty good golf course. Hopefully things will go our way."

Harvey, a sophomore from Las Vegas said he is looking to win the tournament personally and as a team.

"It's good to get the first tournament out of the way," Harvey said. "I haven't won a college tournament yet. I feel like my game is there to do it. You just have to stay patient and let it happen."

Darren Wilcox/Daily Universe

BYU setter Anna-Lena Smith prepares to set up a teammate in Saturday night. BYU defeated the Wyoming Cowgirls in three games.

"They also have very young people," Michaelis said. "We have young middles and so does Wyoming."

The main difference between BYU and Wyoming, Michaelis explained, is BYU's middle blockers have consistently improved throughout the season.

"Our practices are going very well," Michaelis said. "I'm pleased with the progress our young middles are making."

We want you to know.

By its very nature, what we do as a key member of the Intelligence Community requires a high degree of confidentiality. We gather intelligence from foreign electronic signals for U.S. government decision makers at the highest levels; at the same time, we try to prevent our adversaries from gaining access to our own vital U.S. communications. As a part of accomplishing these two objectives—and to meet our increasingly complex role in today's changing world—we regularly invite select applicants to peer into our world...to capture a glimpse of the dedication, the environments, the challenges, and the special people that define the NSA as a unique career destination.

What you'll see will raise your eyebrows.

Imagine working with over-the-horizon technologies, including those that won't come into commercial mainstream use for many years. Couple this with the importance of the work we do at the NSA (work that enhances the nation's security and the safety of every citizen) and you have a career that is both challenging and compelling...and ultimately, so much more rewarding. If you are a Graduating College Senior, we invite you to explore our opportunities in the following degree areas:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mathematics
- Language Studies — Asian, Middle Eastern or Slavic (except Russian)

You may qualify if you and your immediate family members are U.S. citizens. Computer Science majors must have at least a 2.75 GPA, and the minimum GPA for Engineers is 3.0. You must also successfully complete a background investigation and security clearance. (We suggest applying at least six to eight months before you would like to begin your NSA career.) Seatbelts save students

Recent accidents showcase need for road safety

By KELLEY RADUNICH
kelly@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Saturday night, a Provo man was thrown from his vehicle and killed in a major collision on University Avenue. He was not wearing a seat-belt.

The people he collided with were belted in, and their car had airbags. Both of them are in serious condition at Utah Valley Regional Medical Center. But they are alive.

Last Thursday, Orem resident Kristina Boone made a left turn in her 1971 Land Rover onto 800 North in Orem and collided with a Honda Civic.

She was thrown from her car, landed on the inside lane of traffic, and was killed instantly when a semi-truck ran her over.

Her death may have been prevented had she been wearing a seat belt, said Sgt. Gary Downey of the Orem Police.

According to the National Safety Council, 63 percent of Utahns wear their seat belts consistently.

The percentage of Americans across the country who buckle up is 73.6 percent, said Senior Officer Michael Lastowski of the Provo Police.

"Seat belt usage has steadily gone up in Utah since 1986, when the state implemented a mandatory seat belt law, but we still need to encourage it more," he said.

Sgt. Bernie Turner of the Orem Police said about 30 percent of drivers he passes while on duty are not wearing seat belts.

"You can't be pulled over just because I see you're not wearing a seat belt. It's only considered a secondary offense. There are several states, including California, where this is legal, though," he said.

If a child is seen not wearing a seat belt, police are allowed to pull the car over and write a citation, Turner said.

"We're pretty aggressive on child restraint. If we stop you, the fine is between $14-$16 for every person without a seat belt on," he said.

Turner said that drivers offer numerous excuses for not buckling up. "They'll tell me it's too inconvenient, or they're too restrictive. Others say it rubs their neck and causes irritation because they're too short," he said.

Officer Dave Bennett of the University Police said the rate of BYU students wearing seat belts is higher than the Utah average.

"From my experience, when I talk with students after an accident, 95 percent or higher report that they were wearing a seat belt at the time of the accident," he said.

Many BYU students have been in car accidents that may have claimed their lives had they not been wearing a seat belt.

Mark Beidleman, a senior from Los Angeles, majoring in business management, said wearing a seat belt definitely saved his life during a car crash in Idaho.

"My friends and I got our Suburban sucked off the side of the road in a blizzard. We rolled down a 30-foot cliff and landed upside down, suspended by our seat belts. When we took off our seat belts in an attempt to get out, we dropped straight on our heads.

"All the cops that showed up said that if we hadn't been wearing our seat belts, we would have gotten our necks broken for sure. Ever since then, I've always worn it, even if I'm traveling a short distance," he said.

Mehrsa Baradaran, a junior from Goshen, N.Y., majoring in English, has other reasons for wearing her seat belt.

"The little red light on my dashboard won't go off until I put my seat belt on. It gets kind of annoying, so I always end up wearing it," she said.

But some BYU students don't see a point to wearing a seat belt.

"I rarely wear my seat belt. I've never gotten in an accident, and don't plan to, so I really don't see the need for it," said Sarah Garrett, a sophomore from Orlando, Fla., majoring in recreational management.

Senior Officer Lastowski said local programs like the Officer Friendly program and Traffic School work to reinforce the importance of buckling up to local drivers.

"The people who don't wear their seat belts can't be classified as a being a certain type of person. It's a problem that's prevalent among all classes of people, people from all walks of life," he said.

The second objective is to help each sister understand that she is a spirit daughter of Heavenly Father, thus her possibilities are great.

The third objective is to reach out and serve those in her family, her ward and her community.

To help illustrate the idea of serving others, she used the life of Mother Teresa, who spent most of her life laboring among the world's poor

As Relief Society members it is important to bring more than just casseroles to those in need, they also need light and encouragement. By teaching of Christ and the light he possesses others can be nourished.

Fourth in the objectives of the Relief Society is the strengthening and protecting of families.

"Has there ever been a time in all of history when that strength and protection was more desperately needed?" Sister Jensen asked.

Motherhood is the most noble work a woman can be engaged in. It provides opportunities for both the mother and the family.

The fifth objective is to help each sister feel needed, included, valued and loved.

"Everyone is welcome in Relief Society. It matters not where you come from, what your weaknesses are, what you look like—you belong here!" Sister Jensen said.

The sixth objective is to help each sister understand the importance of sustaining the priesthood, as well as the blessings that come from making and keeping sacred temple covenants.

Provo man dies in 2-car collision

A man was killed and two others injured in a collision at 4000 N. University Ave. Saturday night.

The deceased, an unidentified 32-year old Provo resident, was driving erratically in a 1978 Dodge Sedan south on University Avenue.

He suddenly braked and veered into the north-bound lane where he struck a Honda, according to a Provo Police news release.

The Sedan was seen driving east on 4800 North from Orem when it suddenly turned onto University Avenue.

Lt. DuVal of the Provo Police Department said several witnesses saw the deceased's car ramming into other vehicles before it swerved into the other lane.

The driver of the Sedan was ejected through the passenger window and died at the scene of the crash. He was not wearing a seat belt.

The driver and passenger of the north-bound vehicle were transported to Utah Valley Regional Medical Center where they were treated for injuries.

The driver of the Honda, Ben Swenson, 24, of Orem, was listed in serious condition Sunday morning.

His wife, Alison Swenson, 23, was also listed in serious condition after undergoing exploratory surgery.

Nurse Supervisor Zina Johnson reported that Alison came through the surgery fine. She also said both victims are expected to recover.

Both victims were wearing their seat belts. Lt. DuVal said the car was also equipped with air bags, which helped lessen the impact of the crash.

Lt. DuVal said police found an empty beer can in the deceased's vehicle. He said he does not think it was a factor in the crash, however, because the can was dry.

He also said the police will perform routine checks to see if alcohol or drugs were involved.

Devin Jones, 27, of Provo, saw the aftermath of the crash on his way home.

He said the Honda was partially in the ditch and the other car was halted in the slow lane.

"Both of them were totalled," he said.

Heather Andelin, 22, a senior from Springfield, Mo., majoring in family science, also saw the crash.

"The two cars were totally smashed. We were overwhelmed by it," she said.

The Provo Police Department had not notified all of the family of the deceased victim as of Sunday evening.

Utah family gets house from Congress

By TERESSA GENETTI-SCOTT
teressa@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Six months ago Gary and Nettie Montieth only dreamed about having a home and a yard for their five children to play in. Now that dream is taking shape and already has four walls and nine windows.

In April the Montieth family qualified to be a part of Utah Valley's first "House that Congress Built" project. The program is a humanitarian effort by the House of Representatives to provide simple, decent housing for needy families.

The Montieths will have the chance to purchase the house at actual cost with the help of a 20-30 year no interest loan.

The payments the Montieths make on the house will help to support future "House that Congress Built" projects.

Gary Montieth said their only son Austin had undergone two open heart surgeries. He said the medical bills from those surgeries made a down payment on a house out of reach for the family.

"A down payment like most people do it can be difficult (to afford)," he said.

The Montieth family must also provide 350 to 500 hours of "sweat equity" before they can move into the house.

However, they are not alone in their effort. About 25 local businesses and non-profit organizations have also donated both time and money to the project.

The Utah County Republican Women provided some service time to the project Saturday morning.

Marsha Fernlund, a member of Utah County Republican Women's board, coordinated the service as part of the Republican Women's Caring For America project.

"I got really good response. We also had a lot of people who couldn't make it (to help build) donate money to the project," she said.

Kena Matthews chairs the "House that Congress Built" project for the Orem/ Provo Habitat for Humanities.

She said the goal of the program is to build one house in all 435 congressional districts within a year.

The Montieth's house will be the ninth Habitat for Humanities house

Kate Mallory/Daily Universe

The Montieth children help volunteers working to build their home on Saturday. The house is Utah Valley's first "House that Congress Built" which is a humanitarian effort by the House of Representatives to provide decent housing for needy families.

in Orem and Provo since 1991.

"You go and see how excited they (the family) are, and it makes it all worth it," she said.

Matthews said the major problem the program faces is funding.

"We have a lot of labor, but it's getting money for material and things that seems to be our problem," she said.

Russell Hillman, field coordinator for U.S. Rep. Chris Cannon, said the congressman is very much interested in the project and has come on several occasions to help build.

"It helps the needy family that can probably not afford to get into a home. It's a great humanitarian thing that they are doing here with the house," he said.

Rich Zundel, construction management coordinator for Habitat for Humanity, said his job is to organize the purchase or donation of materials and labors for the Habitat house being built.

He said it usually takes six to eight months to complete because of funding. He expects the Montieth's home to be finished by November.

Germans elect new chancellor

Associated Press

BONN, Germany — Gerhard Schroeder and his Social Democrats won national elections Sunday, ushering in the first change of government Germany has seen after 16 years of conservative rule under Chancellor Helmut Kohl, the West's longest-serving leader.

The new, 54-year-old chancellor will be the first of his generation, rooted in the leftist movements of the 1960s, to lead Europe's biggest nation.

Throwing up his arms in a victory Israel says O.K. to U.S. plan for West Bank land

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Secretary of State Madeleine Albright's push for at least a partial West Bank accord cleared a major hurdle Sunday as Israel largely accepted a U.S. proposal for how much land it will yield to Palestinians.

But Israel's ambassador to the United Nations, Dore Gold, said in an interview: "If there's no security, there is no deal."

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said Sunday on CNN that Israel's agreement with the United States was "almost complete about the amount of land that we would hand over. It is territory that is uninhabited by Palestinians but is very important for our security."

Netanyahu said the remaining issue was "to make sure that the land that we hand over to the Palestinians does not become a base for continued terrorist attacks against Israel."

Gold said Yasser Arafat's Palestinian Authority must break up terrorist cells on land it already holds on the West Bank and in Gaza and confiscate weapons.

On the Palestinian side, Yasser Kidwa, who heads the Palestinian delegation to the United Nations, said reaching a final agreement was impossible at this stage. He said Albright and her team were trying to reach agreements on several issues, and "we are not against that."

Nabil Shaath, a senior Palestinian official and negotiator, said, however, the Palestinians told Albright "that we are insisting on the package deal, and we are not ready to accept anything less than that."

Albright met with Arafat again, meanwhile, and planned to see Netanyahu Sunday night. She held back-to-back meetings with the two leaders Saturday night, as well.

Reporters were kept at a distance, and Albright said only one word publicly since the series of meetings began. That was Saturday night when in response to a reporter's shouted question how her meeting with Arafat had gone, she replied: "Good."

Albright is laying the groundwork for meetings President Clinton will hold at the White House with Netanyahu on Monday and Arafat on Tuesday.

On a conciliatory note, Arafat reiterated his aspirations for a Palestinian state, but said he hoped it would be part of an international "celebration" of peace with Israel.

In the past, Arafat has declared his intention to establish a state whatever the outcome of peace talks. Albright and Netanyahu have condemned such "unilateral declarations" on issues that are supposed to be on the agenda for negotiating a final settlement.

On Monday, Arafat is due to address the U.N. General Assembly, where support for the Palestinians is high and Israel is frequently denounced.

salute, Schroeder promised cheering supporters he would keep pledges to fight unemployment -- this year's major campaign issue -- as well as achieve long-awaited tax and economic reforms.

"The Kohl era has come to an end," Schroeder proclaimed to the cheering party faithful. "Our task will be to thoroughly modernize our country and to unblock the backlog of reform."

The defeated Kohl will be remembered best as the chancellor who unified communist East Germany with the West in 1990, after the fall of the Berlin Wall.

Schroeder, too, will have his shot at history as he oversees two monumental changes next year: the government's return to Berlin, its prewar capital, and the switch from the trusted German mark to the European common currency, the euro.

Kohl, 68, looked tired and sad as he conceded defeat.

"This is a hard evening for me, and for us all," Kohl told his supporters.

"... I wish Herr Schroeder the best of luck and a successful time in office." He also announced he would not run for re-election as chief of his party, likely making way for his protege, Wolfgang Schauble, to succeed him.

Schroeder supporters streamed into the streets of Bonn, holding balloons and chanting "Kohl must go!" Many voters have known no other chancellor but Kohl, and the promise of change brought tears of joy at party headquarters.

"Finally, finally. I have rarely been so happy," said Uta Tiedtke, 51, dabbing her eyes as she stood among the revelers. "My two children have never known anything other than Kohl. This means the end of stagnation. We've been waiting for this so long."
